Translation & Typesetting Process.

Multilingual Typesetting

The world contains an abundance of writing systems, each fascinating in their own right, with their own quirks and characteristics. However this comes with enough formatting rules to leave your head spinning. Don't worry, these are the things we know about!

At Living Word, we understand that your translation needs to look the part too. From Arabic to Gujarati or Vietnamese to Urdu, we'll make sure your words are dressed for the part before your clients/users see them.

Stage 1: Translation.

Step-by-step guide

1. You send us a full brief along with a low-resolution PDF of the artwork for quoting purposes.

   The brief should contain the language(s) required, subject matter, age of reader, country of intended audience and an ideal delivery deadline.

2. We'll then count the total words and assesses the PDF artwork for the cost estimate.

   The cost estimate will include translation, proofreading, typesetting and a final artwork check by the translator - split by service.

3. A cost estimate is sent to CIE for approval with an estimated delivery date.

   Timings are dependent on translator availability of CIE 's regular translator and proofreader.

4. You confirm go-ahead in writing by email, including a purchase order number and an agreed delivery date.

   A purchase order is not necessary to action each project, but must be received before delivery. Any reference material should be made available at this stage too. Web links, style guides and approved translations we have not previously seen, are all extremely useful.

5. You send us the high-resolution InDesign artwork via www.wetransfer.com

   All artwork should contain a final & up-to-date InDesign file, fonts, images and diagrams containing live editable text*.*

6. All the copy is stripped from the artwork and transferred to a bilingual word file.

   Please allow up to 1 day for this, dependent on the size of artwork, number of diagrams / charts involved.

7. The translation and proofreading stage is put into progress.

   Any questions or queries during the process will be forwarded to CIE in a query file. All answers should be provided in within query file and returned to us.

8. We will then provide a finished translated bilingual Word document for you to approve.

9. Any amends to the Word file by an in-country representative should be done using the 'track changes' function, allowing us to consult with our linguists efficiently.

   We'll then send you a report to discuss with your in–country representative. When we're all agreed on which changes are to be made, the word file will be updated.

10. The updated Word file will then be sent to you for final approval.

    Discussion of changes and approval of the final Word file at this stage means that there is less likelihood of changes being made during the typesetting stage.

Stage 2: Typesetting.

Step-by-step guide

12. Next we then put the typesetting stage into progress using the approved bilingual Word file.

13. Our typesetters will send us back a low-resolution PDF proof of the artwork, whereby we'll perform a final quality internall check.

14. A PDF proof is then sent to you for a final artwork approval and any preferential changes should be sent to us at this stage.

> Please note*, any preferential changes made by CIE during this stage may incur additional typesetting charges, plus possible charges for any extra linguistic work.*

15. Our typesetters will make any changes to the artwork (if applicable) and will then provide a high-resolution, print ready PDF.

    If the document is designed for digital use only please inform us at stage 13. A low-resolution final PDF will be supplied set up for that requirement.

16. We'll then forward the final artwork PDF to you.

    Job complete and ready for invoicing.

Who owns the InDesign file?

Ownership of the Indesign file and all its associated components, text, artwork and subsequent output files, and copyright of the text remain with CIE.

Living Word usually asks the typesetters to retain these files as they then have the artwork available should any further updates or revisions be needed.

Also, typeset InDesign files can be very large and so this also avoids having to send them back and forth.

However, the InDesign file can be requested at anytime (preferably on completion of the job) and sent to you via WeTransfer.

What's included?

- Setting up of the artwork for typesetting
- Stripping of the text for translation
- Translation and proofreading
- Checking CIE revisions to the translation (assuming these are made pre-typesetting and using track changes in the translation Word document)
- Corrections as a result of translation errors
- Typesetting
- Lo-res PDF proof and final check
- Corrections as a result of typesetting errors
- Final output file of the type requested at the quote stage

Additional charges?

- Changes to artwork, layout or images / graphics / logos once the artwork files have been set up
- Additions to the text (in terms of volume)
- Discussions about and preferential changes to the translation (if there are lots of them and a dialogue is needed between in-country representatives and translators)
- Changes to the text after the typesetting stage (unless as the result of an error on the part of Living Word or typesetters)
- Changes to artwork, design, layout or images after the typesetting stage
- Our typesetters archive the InDesign files and their system files after a period of time and may make a charge to access and re-import these to their production software.
- We can supply final output in the form of a print ready PDF, or as InDesign files if further work is needed to be done by CIE later. However, if adjusted InDesign files have to be resent to the typesetters to have additional typesetting done, this may result in extra costs.
